DFW-area Title Agency Owner Johnny L. Collins II Elected to Board of Statewide Trade Association

AUSTIN – The Texas Land Title Association (TLTA), one of the state’s oldest trade associations, recently elected Johnny L. Collins, II, President of Community National Title headquartered in Dallas, to serve on its Board of Directors.

“Johnny is a forward thinking and passionate title insurance executive and we’re excited to have his perspectives help guide our association,” said Leslie Midgley, Executive Vice President and CEO of TLTA. “The son of a prominent real estate broker, Johnny literally grew up in the business and made the most of that experience to carve his own path in the title insurance industry. We are very fortunate to have him in our industry and on our leadership team.”

Collins is a pioneer, holding the distinction of being one of the first Black title agency owners in Texas and the first Black professional to serve on TLTA’s board. An active industry volunteer, he also serves on TLTA’s Legislative Committee that helps guide the association’s interactions with the legislators who oversee the regulated title industry.

A proud graduate of Texas Christian University where he had a very successful track career, Collins also maintains a strong focus on family. He and his wife of 19 years, Toni, are the proud parents of two children and are active in their church and community.
